AWE Learning Customer Review:

"We have had AWE Computers here for many, many years. We definitely got our money out of our first order. We had five altogether and we did NOT put them on the Internet and they were well-loved by children and their families in our children's department. I have seen teens and adults using them too, especially our non-English speakers. They were very easy to set up and get statistics each month. We had a problem with one computer and it was convenient to send it in to have it worked on. These computers were pretty much maintenance-free and parents felt good about their kids doing something educational on them. So...now we have updated our five computers to two Bilingual touch screens, two regular touch screens, and one tablet. Kids are really loving them! Thanks for a great product!"

Back-to-school anxiety during COVID-19

Going back to school can be stressful for any child—especially for kids living through the COVID-19 pandemic and who have returned to the classroom.

A year of remote learning has taken an emotional, mental, and developmental toll. Children have fallen behind, missed out on many events and milestones, and suffered from a lack of social interactions with friends.

Declining numbers of COVID-19 over the summer months made it possible for schools around the country to reopen, with safety provisions such as masking and social distancing.

But although a return to in-person school promises a more stable, interactive learning environment, the transition also presents new mental health challenges in children. Anxiety in children has risen during the pandemic with all the unknowns and their worlds being turned upside down.

Follow the link below to read about how you can help your children with Covid-19 related anxiety.
